MINERS ADVISED TO RETURN TO WORK, BUT THEY STILL ARE OUT

Some Division of Sentiment Now Existing Among the Pittsburg District Workers

CONVENTION COMES TO CLOSE

Vice President Hayes Imparts Instructions to Delegates and Adjournment is Taken—Scale Question Up to International Organization.

Miners of district No. 5 were advised Saturday in the closing session of their convention at Pittsburg to return to work, until some sort of an adjustment is reached. However, they have not done as advised so far and practically all mines operating as union mines in the district are closed down.

Instructions were given by Vice President Frank J. Hayes just before he adjourned the convention. Asked his personal opinion as to whether there will be a strike he said, "I don't know. The question is entirely with the executive committee of the international board. The question has been submitted to the committee in the form of a motion, requesting a strike, but I can't say what the action will be." Advice to the miners to return to work had previously been given by William Green, international secretary-treasurer.

The first shot was fired in the battle to remove President Van Bittner and Vice President W. P. Hanaway from office, when a motion was made on the floor of the convention that the international officers be asked to take charge of this district pending action. The motion was declared out of order since the convention was called for the express purpose of considering the wage scale.

The district now is in somewhat of an uproar. Miners are divided as to what now to do. Some wish to return to work, abiding by the action of the international organization, while the radicals, which were largely represented in the Pittsburg convention wish to stay out and if possible oust the present officials. This sentiment was fostered at at Charleroi meeting some weeks ago. Probably something definite will be done this week, but it is hardly thought there will be much if any resumption of mines for days to come.

WASHINGTON POSTOFFICE CLERK DISSAPPEARS WITH SUM OF $1,265

Completing the checking up of the accounts in the registry department of the accounts in the registry department of the Washington postoffice, inspectors found that there is a shortage of $1,265, the amount stated by Paul C. Theilman, trusted clerk who disappeared last Wednesday, in a letter he mailed back to Postmaster Joe W. Martin, telling of his crime. It is said at the Washington postoffice that no trace of Theilman had been discovered.

ACCEPTS INVITATION TO RIDE, LEFT BY ROADSIDE

Two young men returning to Donora at midnight Friday by way of Turkey Hollow road came upon a young woman weeping by the roadside. On stopping their machine to make inquiries they learned that she had been attending the carnival at New Eagle and had accepted an invitation for an automobile ride with some men she was not acquainted with. After being taken miles from her home and declining to acquiesce in all the plans of her companions, she was put out of the car and they departed. The Donora autoists took the girl to her home in Black Diamond.

PACKET SERVICE RESUMED ON THE UPPER MONONGAHELA RIVER

Packet Revonah Secured for the Summer By Captain Noel and Others—Will Make Two Trips a Week

Packet service has been resumed on the Monongahela river, the oil-burning packet Revonah, owned by Capt. Orville Noel and others, being secured for the summer. The boati is considerably larger and reported to be faster than the Grantsville, which packet the new boat replaced. She is equipped with 50 horsepower engines and is capable of a speed of seven miles an hour.

The Revonah is 90 feet long, 23 feet beam and 60 tons capacity. She was purchased at Madison, Ind., and arrived at the Pittsburg wharf Saturday last. Semi-weekly trips will be made between Pittsburg and up-river towns, the boat being scheduled to depart each Monday and Thursday from the Pittsburg wharf.

TALBOT BEGINS LONG SENTENCE

Man Accused of Participation in Houston Robbery Taken to Penitentiary

PARDON MAY BE ASKED FOR

Thomas H. Talbot, convicted on Monday of his part in the robbery of the First National bank at Houston on April 6, and sentenced on Thursday from eight to ten years in the penitentary, began his long term of imprisonment Saturday. He took his dinner at Riverside. He was taken to the penitentiary early Saturday by Deputy Sheriff David Creigh. No appeal will betaken from the decision of the court in refusing to grant the new trial moved by counsel for the defendant.

It is understood that later an appeal may be made to thepardon board. Judge McIlvaine has handed down a formal decree overruling the motion for a new trial, submitted on Thursday morning. In that motion Talbot's attorney averred the verdict was against the law and the evidence against the weight of the evidence and that the defendant had in his possession after-discovered evidence which is material to the case and which he can produce in court if a new trial is granted. Time was asked in which to file additional reasons.

PITTSBURG COAL GETS READY FOR SHUTDOWN; LILLEY WILL RESUME

Orders have been received by superintendents and office men of the Pittsburg Coal company along the Monongahela valley to remove shoes of mine mules and to turn them out to pasture. This is taken by close observer to signify that a long drawn out strike is in prospect in District No. 5. Second only to this announcement in importance is the significant notice posted by the Lilley Coal and Coke company, by their superintendent Thomas Elliott at their plant near West Brownsville, asking miners to return to work no later than Wednesday. The alternative if they do not return is that the company will hire men in their places. This action is the outcome of wage scale trouble.

Some years ago the Pittsburg Coal company was at the mercy of District No. 5 during a controversy. Since then the company has opened mines in Illinois, Ohio and West Virginia, so that in a sense operations can be carried on independently of the Western Pennsylvania field. That operations will be carried on after such manner seems the intention of the company.

The notices posted at the Lilley mine, copies of which are being posted at valley towns, read as follows: "The Lilley mine will resume operations Monday, July 5, and will pay the scale of the New York agreement, giving a five per cent increase. Men who do not report for work by Wednesday, June 7, will forfeit their jobs. Any man who does not report for work and who has tools in the mine, must remove said tools from the mine at once." Some activity was reported about the mine today. It is stated that after Wednesday the Lilley mine will give miners work regardless of their union affiliations. This virtually might be taken to mean that the mine will operate non-union. That the present trouble may culminate in similar action elsewhere is predicted if there is not a settlement soon of the wage scale.

M'KEAN COMMANDERY TAKES PART IN FIELD DAY EXERCISES

About 88 Go From Here to Attend Pittsburg Affair—Rain Causes Change of Plans.

About 88 sir knights from McKean Commandery No. 80, Knights Templar, attended and participated in th annual field day of Division No. 2. A reception to Grand Commander Right Eminent Sir Andrew G. Williams was a part of the day's program. A parade was another big feature. On account of inclement weather a change of plans in regard to some details was made necessary, yet the day's enjoyment was not spoiled. Charles S. McKean commander headed the Charleroi sir knights.

TWO CITIES MAKE PROPERTY HOLDERS PAY FOR STREETS

Connellsville and Altoona Only Two In State of Third Class Not Paying Part of Paving Bill.

According to statistics compiled by the state department of labor and industry, Connellsville and Alttona are the only third class cities in the state which require property owners to pay all of the cost of street paving. Most of the other cities pave at least the street intersections.

Beaver Falls pays 20 percent, Corry, Dubois, Monongahela City, Titusville pay one-third of the cost and Reading and Lancaster are reported as paying all the paving out of city funds.

Connellsville is reported to have 11.7 miles of brick paving. This compares very favorably with the amount of paving in other cities of its size; in fact, the mileage is greater than most of the others.

The reports show that municipalities which assess costs against the property owners are able to do less paving than where the city assumes the expense.

The average cost of sheet asphalt runs from $170 to 296 a square yard. Brick paving costs from $1.60 to $2.50 a square yard on a concrete base and as low as $1.25 on a gravel base. The most recent cost of wood block paving is $2.72 a square yard.

The department is now making a tabulation of paving costs in boroughs of 8,000 population and over.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR GRADUATES RECEIVE THEIR DIPLOMAS SUNDAY

Four From Charleroi Complete Course Mapped Out by National Organization and Studied Here

Graduation exercises were held in connection with the regular program of the Washington Avenue Presbyterian young people's society Sunday evening. The united society, with headquarters in Boston, Mass., has instituted an "Expert Endeavor Course" comprising a year's study in the practical principles of the organization. The local society now has four graduates as follows: John H. Clutter, Mrs. Ellis Allman, Miss Mamie Rockwell and Mrs. J. A. Henderson. The diplomas were presented by the pastor, Rev. John R. Burson. So far as is known these are the only graduates in this part of the country.

BATHING BEACH READY FOR THE FORMAL OPENING ON THURSDAY

Superintendent, H. Ludwig Arrives to Begin His Duties

BEACH IS A PLACE OF BEAUTY

Flower Beds Arranged and Trees Are Whitewashed—Beach to be Conducted Similarly to Last Year—Concerts Planned for Summer Season

The Charleroi Bathing beach will be opened to the public for the summer season Thursday of this week. Howard Ludwig who was the manager of the beach last season, has arived to take up his work as supervisor the coming season, and practically all arrangements have been made for the opening date.

The Bathing beach has been converted into what easily will be the pleasure spot of town. Beautiful flower gardens have been arranged and flowers are starting to bloom. A suitable fence that adds to the beauty has been donated by C. J. Mogan, scuperintendent of the Pittsburg Steel company and it has been put in place about the flower beds.

Today work was started on the erection of a shower bath apartment. The men's bath house has been enlarged to double its capacity of last year.

Trees fronting the shore along the beach have been whitewashed, adding to the effect. Buildings have been renovated and improved. The beach proper has been enlarged somewhat, and it is sanded completely with a deep sand. The borough has strewn cinders to improve the walk to the beach park.

This year the beach will be conducted much along the same lines that it it was last, with the exception that season tickets will be sold. U. S. Orange will have the ice cream and confectionery privileges. The men's bath house will be in charge of Paul R. Nutt and Mrs. Riley will supervise the women's bath honse.

Band concerts are planned for the summer season atoccasional intervals. Announcements will be forthcoming later.

RIOT CALL COMES TO POLICE AS AFTERMATH OF CHRISTENING

Bad Fight Takes Place at Shady Avenue and Eleventh Street—Foreigners to Appear for Hearing.

From Shady avenue and Eleventh street came a riot call to the police at 11 o'clock Sunday night, whereupon it developed that a christening had been in progress there among some foreigners with the usual result where firewater flows. Four were taken in toil. The christening was at John Valinsky's home. Frank Valinsky and a big foreigner whose name has not yet been learned but whom the police are trailing, both with a good load of firewater aboard quarreled and then fought. Presently John Zalosky and Charles Taluni engaged in the fracas and the spilling of blood became an interesting diversion for a time. A stove was broken and other furniture sadly misused. The foreigners are to appear for a hearing tonight before Burgess Woodward, having left forfeits.

Russians Throw Bricks at Monessen Man That Strike Where They Are Aimed

ARE HELD PENDING OUTCOME

Alex Klitnish, a Monessen Russian is in the Memorial hispital at Monongahela with a fractured skull as the result of a war argument with John Conerniski and Mike Maltoski, also Russians.

Hostilities opened Sunday with a renewal of a quarrel dating back several days. It became bitter at once and into the street the trio rushed. Both Conerniski and Maltoski it is said reached for bricks and each hurled a half a brick at the luckless head of Klitnish. Both bricks landed and hewas hurried to the hospital while the others were arrested. They are being held pending the outcome of Klitnish's injuries.

COMING OVER TO REPUBLICANS

Another surrender to complete [illegible] of all Republicanism was effected [illegible] on Thursday night by C. A. Bu[illegible] in his speech at Newark, N. J., when he asserted his earnest adherence to the Republican principle of [illegible] tive tariff for the development [illegible] American industries. The Progressive leader sees as clearly as anyone not a Democrat that "if there is not such a tariff, we shall face the gravest economic disaster after the close of the war." That being the case, says the Pittsburg Gazette Times, there is no reason for anyone subscribing to his views remaining out of the Republican fold, for protection will be one of the principal planks of the party platform, as it will be a cardinal principle of the true men nominated by the party to make effective its policies.

Not always has Col. Roosevelt so frankly espoused protection. The Republican division of four years ago was accentuated in a measure by animosity to those party leaders whose devotion to the protective tariff principle was denounced as sordid at a time when some others believed less material things should be advanced to the welfare of all the people. The Progressive party platform in 1912 of qualified kind, declared for immediate downward revision. Time has softened the asperities which prompted the wholesale condemnation of the principles, policies and personnel of the Grand Old Party, while time and experience have proved the utter futility of anti-Republican methods to promote the good of the county. So Col. Roosevelt, buttressing his support of Americanism, turns naturally to the Republican principle of protection to accomplish "the Americanism of our industries." Why, then, should any others hesitate to take the same frank stand? There is no reason and that being admitted, nothing stands in the way of all joining for the success of the ticket to be nominated next week by the Republican National Convention.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S TARIFF POLICY

The following says the Washington Observer was the Republican party's tariff plank in the platform of 1860:

"That while providing revenue for the support of the general government by duties upon imports, sound policy requires such an adjustment of these imports as to encourage the development of the industrial interests of the whole country; and we commend that policy of national exchanges which secures to the workingman liberal wages, to agriculture remunerative prices to mechanics and manufacturers an adequate reward for their skill, labor and enterprise and to the nation commercial prosperity and independence."

It is not true as President Wilson has asserted that the Republican party has not had a new idea in thirty years, but we challenge him to run for reelection on a tariff policy that directly challenges the Republican tariff policy as expresed 56 years ago.

"Scooping" a big city newspaper on a big story is something very rarely accomplished by a small country daily, but it is done once in a while and then it is an achievement worth while. For that reason the Mail is all the more proud that it has to its record a number of beats not only over various valley newspapers, but on its Pittsburg contemporaries also. For instance there was the early afternoon story of the historical naval engagement between British and German battleships Friday. Not an afternoon Pittsburg newspaper that came up the valley until the late evening editions had a word of the story, yet the Mail without any pretenses whatsoever of wire service had about all the details available until late at night. The feat was accomplished naturally enough through a friendly tip, as most news stories are, and as such was much appreciated. There have been other "beats." For instance a few years back when the Pittsburg Steel Company was planning the expenditure of several millions for the erection of blast furnaces at Monessen—a big industrial movement—the story apeared in the Mail three weeks before the Pittsburg newspapers touched it. That sounds odd but it is true. Then the definite details came out. The Mail's story was proven true and there was some chagrin elsewhere. Other instances of "scoops" could be related, but boasting is somewhat out of our line. The Mail's business is presenting the news in a clean cut manner and results are left to speak for themselves.

PICKED UP IN PASSING

She reached San Francisco after dark and was met by friends who motored her to their country home on a hillside.

The next morning she walked out onto the breakfast-porch quite prepared to be astounded with the grandeur of California. Down an avenue of tall trees she caught a glimpse of sykblue water.

"What is that water?" she asked.

"That," replied her hostess, a bit proudly, "is the Pacific ocean."

"Oh! I had an idea it was larger"—Harper's Magazine.

There is a politician in Chicago, who, though of rather a cynical turn, tries hard to refrain from the expression of his pessimistic sentiments while at home or with his friends. Now and then however, his syniclsm gets the better of him.

One day his twelve-year-old son, who had been reading, suddenly put down his book and looking up at his father asked:

"Dad, is it really true that there is honor among t hieves?"

"No, my son," said dad; "thieves are just as bad as other people."—Everybody's Magazine.

YOU CAN.

You can do the things that others have, it's simply up to you: there has nothing been accomplished that you cannot also do. Will you work? That is the question, it is all summed up in that. It's a little word, but mighty, and determines where you're at. You can get nowhere without it, it's the motor in the boat, and unless you set 'er spinning—slowly down the stream you'll float: but if you would face the current and resist the onward drive, if you want to give the rank and file the proof that you're alive, there is just one way to do it—just one system you can hand, figure out your line of action, then just work to beat the band. Will you get there? I should say so! You'll surprise your friends and self, wishing only that you sooner had come down off from the shelf.

PECULIAR WELL IN FLORIDA

Both Salt and Ordinary Water May Be Pumped From It at the Same Time.

In their investigation of the wells and underground waters of Florida the geologists of the United States Geological survey have noted many interesting things. Among these is a well at Welaka, on St. Johns river, from which two kinds of water are obtained.

This well is 309 feet deep. The length of the casing is 110 feet. The well was first drilled to 160 feet, and from this depth ordinary "sulphur" water was obtained. The drill was then carried to a depth of 309 feet, where it encountered a strong mineral water, having a disagreeable, salty taste. In order to use both kinds of water an inner tubing was run nearly to the bottom of the well. Both this and the outer casing were connected with pumps, so that ordinary water and mineral water can be pumped at the same time. A favorite joke played on visitors is to give a drink of weaker water in the first glass and to replace it with the brine in the second.

Not more than half a dozen wells of this kind are known in the country, but there is no reason why similar wells cannot be obtained in regions where the waters in the upper strata differ from those lying deeper.

RECIPES WORTH WHILE

FIVE DELICIOUS DISHES THAT ARE EASY TO PREPARE.

Egg Noodles With Anchovies May Be Recommended—Vermicelli Sweet Custard Excellent—Proper Preparation of Macaroni Soup.

Egg Noodles With Anchovies.—Fry a small onion, sliced, in butter with a teaspoonful of chopped parsley; add six boned anchovies, cut in four pieces each; stir in three-quarters of a cupful of white wine and a cupful of cooked egg noodles and simmer gently for 20 minutes. Serve with grated cheese.

Egg Noodle Sweet Souffle.—Add half a package of cooked egg noodles to two cupfuls of hot milk, and let stand on back of stove until milk is mostly absorbed, then let it cool and add a teaspoonful of salt, half a cupful of sugar, the beaten yolks of two eggs, and whites beaten to a stiff froth. Turn into a buttered souffle mold, set it in a pan of hot water and bake in moderate oven 25 minutes. Serve immediately alone or with sweetened cream.

Vermicelli Sweet Custard.—To half a package of cooked vermicelli add two cupfuls hot milk, a teaspoonful of salt, half a cupful of sugar, two eggs well beaten and half a teaspoonful of vanilla. Turn into a buttered baking dish, set dish in a pan of hot water in oven and bake until the custard is set.

Macaroni Soup.—To one quart of boiling water, salted, add a large handful of macaroni, boil 20 minutes, drain and blanch. Add two cupfuls of strained stewed tomatoes, season highly and just before serving add a cupful of cream.

Soup Spanish With Rings.—Simmer in three quarts of water two pounds of lean meat for two hours. Skim well as it boils, then add one cupful of cooked white beans, four onions chopped fine, two cloves of garlic, four red peppers chopped, and two slices of lemon, salt to taste; allow this to cook thoroughly until soft, strain through a colander, rub through the pulp, place on the fire again and boil; add lastly one-fourth package of soup rings, one tablespoonful of butter and one of milk rubbed in two ounces of flour. When rings are tender the soup is ready.

SOUR BEEF WITH DUMPLINGS

Recipe Which Will No Doubt Find Favor With Anyone Who Is Moved to Try It.

Put three to four pounds of beef (the round is best) in a bowl and pour over it sufficient vinegar to cover. Set aside for 24 hours, turning and basting frequently. Brown two large onions, chopped fine, in two tablespoonfuls butter. Place meat in roasting pan, pour over it the brown onions and the vinegar in which it was soaked; add a few cloves, a blade of mace and a bit of allspice. Bay leaves and lemon peel may be added if desired. When browned and thoroughly cooked the liquor should be strained and thickened either with flour or grated ginger snaps.

Potato Dumplings. — Cream a piece of butter the size of an egg, add yolks of two eggs, half cupful stale bread crumbs and a cupful of cold boiled potatoes; put through the ricer; season with salt and nutmeg, and, lastly, add the beaten whites of the eggs. Make into small dumplings and drop into the boiling liquor in which meat was cooked, and boil, closely covered, for ten minutes.

All Should Be Advertised.

There is no legitimate business, manufacturing an article which people want or should have, which cannot be advertised. The thought that there is not enough profit in a line of goods for advertising is frequently a fallacious one. The idea that only novelties can be so exploited and that staples are not susceptible to advertising has been proven to have no real foundation.

HER WONDERFUL VOICE

Scene—Mrs. Somerville-Brown's reception rooms. Miss Anne Dantie has just finished a Richard Strauss composition on the piano to the applause—but boisterous—of the company. Mrs. Bollister, a stout lady in pink crepe and diamonds, is conversing with Egbert Plinsymons, a pale youth with a reputation for intellectuality. Somerville-Brown is resuming his discussion of the cotton campaign with Bollister. Miss Cora Bollister, a young woman with a swanlike neck and an effect of drowsiness, is gazing soulfully at Thomas Somerville-Brown, Jr., who seems to be having trouble with his collar. The soulfulness, however, is merely an expression of the emotions aroused in her by the music, and is not to be personally applied. Mrs. Somerville-Brown has left Patterson Harp, who is the essence of politeness, to offer her congratulations and thanks to the pianist. Other guests are expressing one to the other their enjoyment of Miss Dantie's performance—with one or two confidential exceptions.

Mrs. Somerville-Brown—That was simply exquisite, my dear—delightful!

Miss Bollister—Don't you adore Strauss?

Thomas Somerville-Brown, Jr.—Well, to tell you the truth, I'm not daffy on him. It sounded like a Chinese orchestra to me.

Miss Bollister—Oh, you are thinking of Johann. This was Richard Strauss. You would love his songs.

Plinsymons—There is a subtle quality in the chords that defies successful analysis; not exactly emotional, because he is, above all things, intellectual. His music appeals to the intellect especially. I find it so myself. Have you ever studied the theory of tones?

Mrs. Bollister—No, I haven't, but Cora has. She's studied about everything there is in music. She took lessons of Hocksiewitz, you know. He charged awfully, but I didn't care anything about the price. You haven't heard her sing, have you?

Bollister — You never heard Cora sing, did you? Excuse me; you were going to say—

Mrs. Somerville-Brown—Yes she has a voice. I'd be the last to deny it. So has the man who calls "Rags, old iron" in the alley. This parental pride is an awful thing, Mr. Harp.

Harp—But Miss Bollister's voice is rather—er— Really very much so, don't you know.

Mrs. Somerville-Brown — Well, they've been hinting to have me ask her to sing all evening, but I simply will not.

Thomas Somerville-Brown, Jr. — Mother, I think if you asked Miss Bollister she might sing for us. She sings you know.

Mrs. Somerville-Brown—Yes, I know and I think I might prevail on her to favor us. Now, you run back to her and— Did you say you were going to ask me to make her? No? Then that's all right. Take her to the conservatory.

Plinsymons—Mrs. Somerville-Brown, you are giving us a most delightful evening. The mental atmosphere is positively refreshing. Miss Bollister plays and sings, I hear. Couldn't you induce her—

Mrs. Somerville-Brown—I wish I could, but the dear child is so excessively timid that I know it would be positive torture to her and I really haven't the heart to ask her.

Somerville-Brown—See here, Mary aren't you going to ask that little Bollister girl to sing? Bollister tells me she's a wonder, and I think the crowd needs chirking up.

Mrs. Somerville Brown—Tom, I think you're all in a conspiracy to drive me frantic. I'm trying to find Herr Geineplatz to get him to play, and everybody is bothering me to ask Miss Bollister to sing.

Somerville-Brown—Then why don't you?

Mrs. Somerville-Brown — Because they never heard her, and I want the evening to be a success.

Herr Geineplatz—I haf joost hear dat you vere looking vor me. Mees Bollister, who vas a bupil ohf Hochsiewitz—

Mrs. Somerville-Brown—Wants to sing. Well, I suppose— Where is she?

Herr Geineplatz—I vill be jarmed to blay de aggompaniment.

Mrs. Somerville-Brown—So good of you! Oh, here she is now! You bad girl, where have you been hiding yourself? We want you to sing to us. Now, there's no use saying you can't sing, or that you are out of practice or that you would be ashamed to before so many accomplished musicians. We know all about that.

Huyp—What a wonderful expression—and what a voice!

Bollister—It ain't bad, judges tell me. I'm not musical myself, but I know the money I've spent on her musical education ought to bring some returns.

Mrs. Somerville-Brown—Well, it isn't often one hears anything like that! I should think you would be proud of her, Mrs. Bollister.

Mrs. Bollister—I am.

Caught Them, That Time!

The latest story from Sandhurst Military college is given in the London Evening News: Over night the cadets conspired. When next morning the sergeant gave the order "Number off from the right!" the voices rang out, "One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, knave, queen, king." Quick as lightning the sergeant continued with: "All court cards fall out and report to the major."

THE GIRL

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

"I don't see how on earth you can wedge another one in here. We're packed like sardines, now."

Claire gave her shirts a little shake to fill in every last available inch of space on the back seat of the coach.

"Oh, nonsense," laughed Lewis. "Here, Miss Rickard, just swing up beside me. There's room for you between Ben and me."

Old Ben made room for her graciously, and picked up his reins, which in one hand, waiting the starter's signal in front of the Mountain View hotel. "Gwen wants us to sit there, Lewis," complained Claire anxiously.

"Gwen wants to ride inside," replied Lewis quickly. "Everybody ready? We're off!"

"Do you know her—Miss Rickard?" asked the girl next to Claire.

"I know she's perfectly impossible," returned Claire. "Wonder what Gwen thinks? She's been dropping poor old Lewis over the edge of emotional charms for days, and it serves her right. They're just as good as engaged, and she's been absolutely hypnotized by Wayne Ivesson."

Inside the coach Gwen Arnold sat with Ivesson. For five weeks he had been a guest at the hotel, a slender, scholarly looking youngster who spent most of his time reading on the broad porches or riding the mountain paths.

"It is wonderful to have you all to myself," Ivesson said as the coach swung down into the first gully.

"You call this alone?" laughed Gwen teasingly, wondering who the girl was up on the box.

"Who is she?" asked Ivesson, almost as if he had caught her thought. She was not a guest at the hotel, and seemed more like a mountain type. "Lewis knows her. Odd, isn't it?"

"Lewis has lived up here for three years," she answered, resentfully.

"Ever heard this trip was dangerous?" piped up an old gentleman. "Used to be ten years ago. Almost sure to find a bandit."

"Really?" Gwen leaned forward eagerly.

"I haven't carried a gun in years," went on the old gentleman cheerfully, "but I've got one along today. That boy on the box is carrying money over to the Cuddyhoe outfit to pay off the men their quarterly wages. Got it from the express office. And it's some risk to get it through even today."

"Who has it—the driver or—or Mr Stevens?" asked Gwen.

"Stevens. He's a friend of the superintendent down here and the foreman over there. Haven't got any valuables along, have you?"

Wayne laughed and took out his watch and purse.

"Shall we take an inventory to help along the highwayman when we meet him?" he asked. "Let us give everything to Miss Crandall, and no one would ever be brave enough to hold her up."

Up on the box, Lewis and his two companions watched the gulch as it dipped and widened, narrowed up again and plunged ahead, a gash in the heart of the mountain. When the coach swung down into the Devil's Kettle, it seemed to rock alarmingly, and stopped with a jerk that sent the horses almost on their haunches.

Inside the coach, the people started to rise, but found themselves neatly covered by a revolver held by Wayne Ivesson. His face, usually rather pale, was flushed and his eyes were keen.

"Stay where you are, all of you," he commanded. "Miss Crandall, may I trouble you for the handbag, please?"

Everything of value had been obligingly slipped into Gwen's brown seal handbag, and she hesitated, her eyes flashing into his. Outside, an older man on horseback stood with leveled rifle by the coach.

"Hands up, all of you," he called. "Come on, kid. It's all right."

And Wayne slipped down from the coach, but stopped, for the old gentleman held a revolver at his head.

"Got you this trip," he said pleasantly. "Sit still, ladies. All right, Lewis!"

Lewis suddenly felt the touch of steel in his hand. Old Ben had somehow crumpled down at the bandit's first warning shot, but the girl was in his place, holding the reins. At the voice from the rear of the coach, the man on horseback wheeled his horse and started on a headlong gallop down the gulch road, but Lewis fired after him, bringing the horse to his knees, and he lay motionless with his rider under him.

It had all happened so suddenly that the girls and women had watched the scene in silent horror. Claire was first to note the surprising change in the girl on the box. Her hat was off. She was short-haired and boyish, and was on the ground laughing and talking while Wayne was bound hand and foot.

Gwen waited, white faced and troubled. Finally Lewis came to her side and she laid her hand impulsively on his coat sleeve—such a little motion, but it betrayed to him all of her thoughts. He laid one hand over it closely.

"Well, girlie, I'm sorry you ran into this. We've been expecting it for months. We came prepared. There were two of the sheriff's men with me, Baker on the inside, as the old man, and young Carter outside with me, dressed as the girl. Were you jealous, dear?"

HELPS THE HOUSEWIFE

"SCRUBBING CHARIOT" A DEVICE WORTH COPYING.

Not Only Saves a Great Many Steps, but the Work Can Be Done With Much More Ease and Comfort —How to Make It.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the many labor-saving devices made and demonstrated by the farm women under the direction of the woman agents of the department of agriculture in the South, with the cooperation of the state agricultural colleges, is the "scrubbing chariot." This consists of a comfortable padded frame on rollers which enables the housewife, in wiping the floor, to do the scrubbing with more ease and comfort and save a great many steps. It may be built at a very small cost, the material needed consisting of a ¾-inch plank, 20 by 10 inches, 2-inch strips for the sides, which should be 8½ inches long by 4 inches wide, and a front piece of the same material 20 inches long and 4 inches wide. An ordinary soap box can be used for this by cutting down the size to about 5 inches high and knocking out one side. The padding for the bottom of the chariot may be made of burlap. Tack this around the inside of the chariot and place the whole thing on four rollers. Place a soap dish on one side and a little rack for the scrubbing brush on the opposite side. This contrivance, it is estimated, costs about 47 cents.

DEATH RECALLS OLD SCANDAL

Late Stephen W. Dorsey Accused of Being Leader in "Star Route" Fraud.

The death of Stephen W. Dorsey, former United States senator from Arkansas, at Los Angeles a short time ago recalls the "star-route scandal," in which he was accused of being the leader, the Kansas City Star recalls. Star routes were mail routes in the West and Southwest where there were no railroads or steamboats to carry pouches.

During the Hayes administration a ring of contractors, who bid on carrying mail on these routes, and politicians, through favor, secured control of the routes and by expediting the time required for trips over the various routes and by increasing the number of trips far beyond the needs of the service brought about an increase in the compensation allowed. Also contracts were sublet contrary to law.

Stephen W. Dorsey was alleged to have been leader of the ring and to have put through such legislation as was needed by his influence in congress. The fraud cost the government more than four million dollars.

President Garfield called for an investigation soon after taking office. The alleged combination was brought to trial. At the first trial two men were convicted, but the jurors after being out three days were unable to agree concerning Senator Dorsey. A second trial brought his acquittal after a jury deliberation of a day and two nights.

FLOWERS HAVE REPAID CARE

Those of Today Incomparably More Beautiful Than Any Known to Our Ancestors.

Our grandmothers had one gladiolus about as handsome as a ragged stick dotted with brick-red paint. We have scores, with a vivid, orchid-like beauty and wonderful range of color. They had a stiff, formal dahlia, that looked like a statuette carved out of colored soap. We have dahlias almost as beautiful and graceful as the rose. The whole race of rambler roses is new; so are the rugosa roses; the Darwin tulips are things of yesterday—and it is only a little more than fifty years since the first golden-banded lily flowered on American soil. Yet who can imagine a perfect garden without one?

The old-fashioned garden of today is the olden spirit working with new materials. It ought to be, and in time it will be, more beautiful than anything our ancestors ever knew.

"No one; but I looked at all the other children and then I looked at myself."—Chicago Tribune.

WOMEN CARE FOR HORSES

Scarcity of Man Workers in England Has Brought About a Peculiar State of Affairs.

A notable example of the utilization of female labor in war-time is afforded by three large military horse depots at Reading.

There is not a single man on any of the staffs, the work of attending to the horses being done by gentlewomen. Some of them have been brought up in Australian and Canadian horse-ranches, but most of them are members of the South Berks and other hunts. The depots are convalescent homes for army horses. They have been organized by Mr. Cecil Aldin, the sporting artist and a joint master of the South Berks hunt.

The fifty ladies working at the depots wear caps, short breeches, and gaiters. They meet the horses at the railway stations and do all that is necessary for their comfort, duly dispatching them from the railway stations when they are restored to health.—London Mail.

STEEL PRODUCTS TEAM WINS SATURDAY FROM ELLSWORTH

Local Players Too Much for Miners—Joe Gray Pitches Great Ball For Steel Workers.

The Pittsburg Steel Products' Company baseball team defeated the fast Ellsworth team by the score of 11 to Saturday at Ellsworth. The game was featured by the pitching of Gray who allowed but four scattered hits. Only one man of the Ellsworth team got to reach third base. Williams of Ellsworth pitched well but his support was ragged.

The Pittsburg Steel Products Company has now one of the best independent teams in this section of the country. They have games booked with such teams as East Liverpool, Ohio, Ellwood City, Hollidaysburg, Dubois and others. Manager C. W. Register will open the season at home on the Charleroi baseball grounds with the strong East Liberty Athletics on June 17. Score:

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

SHADOWS AT THE RABBITS' BALL

"This evening," said Deddy, "I have a story I have been intending to tell you for some time.

"Just a little while ago, some rabbits thought that it was high time they should give a ball. So they arranged for a ball to take place the following Tuesday night, and they decided that they would have it quite late in the evening so they could dance in the moonlight.

"All the afternoon of the date arranged for the ball the little rabbits, and even the mother and daddy rabbits, took naps so they would be wide awake and very bright for their party.

"At last the magic hour arrived,

The Rabbits Danced With the Shadows.

and Mrs. Molly Cotton Tail received the guests very graciously.

"After they had taken off their wraps—"

"What sort of wraps did they have, daddy?" asked Nancy

"Oh, they had all kinds. Mrs. Brown Tail Rabbit wore a very lovely evening coat made of dark pine needles, and Mrs. Jack Rabbit wore a lovely mossy wrap decorated with wild rosebuds. And old Br'er Rabbit wore a top hat which was greatly admired, and of which he was very proud.

"Then the fairies came, wearing all sorts of lovely frocks from the woods, and carrying green wands with new, tiny leaves dangling down from them.

"Well, as I was about to say, after they had all taken off their wraps the dancing began. They flitted over the soft green grass, oh, so gracefully and lightly, and every rabbit in the neighborhood was at the ball.

"You see, the ball was given in the beautiful garden belonging to some big people who were still away, and the rabbits had invited themselves to visit their garden. The big lawn was their reception room, and the little lettuce patch was their dining room.

"But, to get back to the ball. Soon they began to notice some of the strangest looking things. For a moment they were frightened. And then they saw what the 'things' were.

"They discovered that they were shadows of all sorts and sizes and descriptions. You know shadows love to dance in the moonlight, and when they saw the rabbits dancing around they simply could not resist joining in, too.

"The rabbits danced with the shadows, and the shadows danced with the rabbits, and the shadows danced with the fairies in their beautiful frocks from the woods.

"The old man in the moon grinned and said to himself:

"'I love to see a fine ball like this. Right out in the open. So many balls are given that will not do for me at all. Many will not even let me look in through a window, but this is a real ball, I say.'

"As for the rabbits, they enjoyed themselves more than they had for ever and ever so long, and the fairies loved the party just as much too. For days and days in the woods afterwards the rabbits' ball was one of the events talked about more than anything else."

WHY DO WE HAVE TWO EYES?

Things We See Seem Solid and Not Flat, With Result We Can Judge Distance Fairly Well.

Because we have two eyes the things we see seem solid and not flat, with the result that we can judge their distance from us with fair correctness. Look through a window at a house across the street with one eye closed and then with the other eye closed. The bars of the window frame will cut across the opposite house in different places. The two fields seen with the eyes separately although in the main alike, differ. When you look at the house with both eyes open the two fields seen by the two eyes are combined and the house across the street assumes depth and relief. Although we see a house with both eyes we see only one house with both eyes. This makes the stereoscope possible—an instrument so designed that the two eyes are made to converge on a single point and yet to see two different pictures. If these two pictures represent a chair as it would appear to the right and left eye respectively, they are perceived as one solid object.—Popular Science Monthly.

DAISY

By JANE OSBORN.

Daisy Dodge was standing in a frame of sunshine in the doorway of the little eight-sided school at Dabneyville vigorously ringing the large hand bell that called the children, little and big, back to the afternoon session.

"Here's another letter for you, Miss Dodge," piped one of the older girls It was Gussie Love, daughter of the general storekeeper, who also acted as postmaster.

After school Daisy began to read her letter.

"Dear Miss," it began in large, distinct, boyish writing, "I'm not much of a letter writer, and I haven't ever started writing to a young lady before, but it is so lonesome out here in the lumber camp that I thought I would begin just to keep from getting so dreadfully blue. Perhaps you have never seen a lumber camp. I am sending a snapshot that shows just what I look like. When you answer this letter, as I hope you will soon, please send me a picture of yourself. I always did like brown-eyed girls the best. With best wishes, Thomas William Jones.

"P. S.—I forgot to say that I am boss of a hundred men in the lumber work and I own ten thousand acres of unworked lumber land that I am going to begin cutting when I have saved enough to begin—perhaps next winter."

For just a moment, Daisy's eyes lingered with interest on the snapshot photograph that showed the writer of the letter in his characteristic costume of the lumberman at his work. She tucked the picture back in the envelope when she realized that she was allowing herself to admire the broad shoulders, straight figure and well-proportioned features of the stranger.

Then she took the key from the pocket of her plain school dress, opened a desk drawer and carefully took out ten letters that she had received within the last two weeks.

Why these letters? Why these proposals?

For half an hour Daisy sat and pondered. Then she wrote a letter that she hoped might clear up the mystery and restore her peace of mind.

It was to this Thomas William Jones, and in it she told him frankly what had happened and she asked him to help her solve the problem.

The letter she received in reply was brief and to the point. "I am ashamed of myself for having written the sort of letter I did, but I was very lonely."

Then he explained that he had read a description of Daisy in a sheet published in a matrimonial bureau.

Daisy answered this letter promptly and then waited impatiently for the next letter from her unseen champion.

On a warm spring evening, about two weeks later, Daisy was sitting on the upper porch of her three-room upstairs abode, when she saw through the semidarkness the tall figure of a stranger swinging up the road and then turning in at the schoolhouse patch. Her heart was beating with excitement when she reached the downstairs door and stood face to face with a strange young man. She had half guessed—surely she had hoped even—that it was Thomas William Jones, and Thomas William Jones it turned out to be.

"I've been traveling a day and a night to get here," he told her, standing in her open door, hat in hand "The reason I came—partly, at least—is to tell you that I have put a stop to those annoying letters. I went to the place where they publish the sheet and I held them up for the letter. Some one had sent it in signed with your name."

Daisy and the stranger forgot all about the offender and began to talk of other matters—even about themselves. They had both been very lonely. They had both lived for years without any real friends.

It was quite dark when Thomas William Jones started to return to the little local tavern where he had left his bag on his arrival in the village. He had been in Daisy's company rather less than an hour, and already she regarded him as her firm friend.

"You will just have my word for it that I am what I say I am," he declared, "but I want to tell you before I leave tonight that only one of the reasons I came here was to give you the letter from the agent. The other reason was to find out for myself if you aren't the girl I have been dreaming of all my life. Are you going to send me back to the woods without a chance to make good?"

Daisy put out her hand to bid him good night.

"You must go away now," she said, "but I don't want you to go back to that lonely camp until—until—"

For a moment he held her hand securely in his giant paw and then he turned and went without another word.

Daisy went to her little bedroom and, before the small oil lamp, opened the folded pages of the letter the stranger had brought from the matrimonial bureau. She read what purported to be a letter from herself, signed by her own name. It was in the crude copybook writing of Gussie Love.

"It's a state-prison offense," she said, half aloud, "but I'll forgive you, Gussie. I can afford to. You did it to bring me happiness and you have succeeded."
